“In general, my philosophical expression in glass has always been a reflection of my interest in eastern mysticism. In recent years my work has come to focus on the inspiration gathered from personal meditative experiences. For specific subject matter, I also make reference to my interests in architecture, music, mathematics and textiles. Rhythm, patterns and sequences are the basics of all my compositions. The interior of my work, once revealed through a small window, is now the focus. The surface has disappeared and become less significant. The inside is abstract, complex. There is explosive energy and color. Where there was once only one component, there are now hundreds, usually thousands.

The goal of spirituality is perfection. Striving for perfection has never been more evident in what I do. Perhaps my sculpture has become an architectural model of a vision for a better world.”
